Must Have a License. Louis C. Justice was before Judge Miller to day charged with being an un Heenaed real estate dealer. Several witnesses were placed on the stand to show that Justice, as agent, had transferred a number of pieces of property. The ground for the bringing of the case was that Justice had bought a suit against Mrs. Blanford for an agent's commission, amounting to $84, this being 3 per cent, on the price paid for the property. Justice claimed that that was the only time that he had made a sale as an agent, but that he was in the employ of the Southern Investment Company and received a share of the commissions from sales made. Judge Miller required Justice to procure a license by next Saturday, or in default he would have to pay a fine.

Benjamin Constant. Benjamin Constant, who is now in Boston engaged in decorative work upon a large order received by him, is noother distinguished foreign artist who is fond of visiting this country. Mr. Constant comes here nearly every year to execute orders. Those who have never seen him imagine him to be a much older man than he is. His figure work is so strong, his coloring so brilliant and his fame so wide that the thought is to picture bim as a mature years. not being more than 45 years of age. He to tail, much taller than the average Frenchman, and has the breadth and steutness of the Englishman of middle tife. He looks more English than French, although he does not speak a word of the language. He is a blonde His eyes are blue, his nose is pronounced and prominent, while the lower part of his face is hidden by a dro-ping mustache and a pointed Van Dyck-beard. He wears a pair of gold-rimmed eye glasses, which give him more the air of a business man than of an artist. He was one of the first of the French

He was one of the first of the French artists to drop what is known as pic turesque dressing, to discard the velvel jacket and the soft hat outside of the studio. He follows exactly the style in dress of the English artists, and they dress with rigid observance of etiquett displayed by the most devoted followers of society. Mr. Constant himself is fend of going out. In his high hat, his closely-buttoned freek and his gleaming gold eye glasses, taken with his rigid puncti stranger would never think of him as the original and unconventional painter of the most interesting features of ern life. He is a refined and cultivated man. He believes that no man car succeed in art who is not a wide student of general affairs, and he who lives in the narrow groove of the studio only ! bound to do narrow work .- Cor. N. 1 Tribune.
